

THE «OLD» CELTIC GODDESS SENA: A NEW TESTIMONY FROM AQUITANIA

Abstract: The inscription Sena[e] on a small votive altar from Saint-Bertrand-de-Comminges is interpreted as a further instance of the Old Celtic theonym SENA «The Old One» which we find worshipped under various forms in Britain, Gaul, Noricum and Spain and to which, according to Pomponius Mela, an important sanctuary was dedicated on the Ile de Sein in front of Point du Raz (Dép. Finistère).

Key-words: Aquitania, Bibracte, Britain, Celtic theonyms, dea Sena, dea Senuna, deae Senae, deus Senaicos, deus Veter, dii/deae Veteres, Hispania, Ile de Sein, Noricum, Pomponius Mela, RIG-L-82i, Saint-Bertrand-de-Comminges.

The Celtic goddess SENA «The Old» is named, probably in the dative singular *Senae*¹, as the first word on a small votive altar (cm. 16,4 x 10 x 8,2) found in 1938 in Saint-Bertrand-de-Comminges, where it had been reused in the medieval wall of the north terrace of the cathedral.

The inscription SENA[E] in comparatively big and regular characters (2,3 cm. high) seems to occupy if not the whole at least the larger part of the first and only line preserved of the dedication, the inscribed field extending to a width of 6,5 cm.

The arula has been published —with a good photograph— as no. 53 in the 1988 collection by Sablayrolles and Schenck of all the votive altars in the Musée Archéologique Départemental de Saint-Bertrand-de-Comminges. Unfortunately, though, the editors did not recognize the Celtic deity as such, therefore tentatively suggesting that «La seule ligne conservée de l'inscription, qui paraît être la première du champ épigraphique, contient peut-être le nom du dédicant» (1988, p. 62). Even less satisfactory is their proposal «on peut songer à un surnom du type de Sena[tor]» (Sablayrolles & Schenck 1988, 62).

To begin with, our altar is not in any respect different from the almost totality of those found in Saint-Bertrand-de-Comminges, where—with just one possible exception—the deity is named first. Moreover, it stems from the high sector of the town, where inscribed altars beginning with dedications I(ovi) O(ptimo) M(aximo), deo Marti and Aberri deo were found². In addition, it was probably matched by altar no. 72 which, also stemming from the «high-town», begins with an S [---] and shows an isolated L (for l(ibens)) towards the end of what seems to be the fourth (and possibly last or penultimate) line of the inscribed field³.

Secondly, the deity SENA represents the same theonym that was discovered 2002 in Noricum, on a votive altar dedicated by C. A. Firmin(i)us and Cl. Secundus or Severus and later inserted in the church of the town of Tiffen⁴. Here it is attested in the dative Senabos from a nominative plural

² Cf. the nos. 5, 17, 18, 19 and 33 of the collection and also the table in Sablayrolles & Schenck 1988, p. 62. For the composition of what might have been the pantheon of a similar multicultural akropolis cf. De Bernardo & García 2008.

SENAE: actually documented as SENA[BOS] «to the venerable old women/ goddesses»⁵, it represents a possibility that we cannot entirely discard also for the altar of Saint-Bertrand-de-Comminges, even if the inscribed field of the latter seems to have been decidedly narrower.

In any case, being what I call «number variation» a very frequent phenomenon in Celtic religion⁶, there is no need for assuming that the deity was worshipped in the same number both in Aquitania and Noricum.

Another instance of SENA, this time in the singular and on a silver leaf from Britain, has been recently published by Tomlin⁷ together with many dedications to a new and probably related goddess SENUNA. The fact that the dedication Senae appears in the same hoard with the latter could imply that it represents a shortened form Sen(un)ae*, were it not for the dedicant's theophoric name Lucilia Sena. Moreover, the ending -una is also attested in theophoric derivative names such as Sacr-una or Vib-únna.

Also in Britain, we find many dedications to the Celtic deity under its «translatio Latina»⁸: together with the plural manifestation contained in deabus Vitiribus, also a specific masculine form is worshipped, both as a singular and as a plural deity, as we see in the dedications deo Veteri and *dibus Veteribus*⁹.

Moreover, given the existence of instances where the «translatio Latina» of an indigenous deity accompanies its Celtic name in one and the same dedication, it is even possible to think that in variants such as Hvitiribus and deo Hveteri, dibus Hveteribus the initial H- represented a shortening of the original Celtic name¹⁰ with an aspirated initial S-*¹¹, i.e. H(enis) Vitiribus, deo H(eno) Veteri, *dibus H(enis) Veteribus*¹².

In Bibracte (Mont Beuvray), a graffito Seno in the dative singular on the bottom of the vase RIG-L-82i may represent a votive offering to the same god *SENO*s implied by some of the British dedications.

Related to SENA at least semantically, i.e. if it is not a further case of «variatio generis» of the deity¹³, is the Hispanic god SENAICOS: attested in a dedication Senaico, made by a devotee from Cantabria, it goes back to an older form SENACIOS meaning «The Old» or perhaps «The Older One»¹⁴ and attested in the personal (theophoric?) onomastics of the Iberian Peninsula (nomen Senacia and cognomen *Senacianus/-a*¹⁵)¹⁶.

⁸ As to this specific type of «Interpretatio» cf. De Bernardo Stempel 2005/i.p., and also eadem 2003/07, 2006/i.p. and De Bernardo & Hainzmann 2006.

⁹ Note that, in addition to «number variation», also «gender variation» is a very frequent phenomenon in Celtic religion (De Bernardo Stempel 2004/06).

¹⁰ Resp. SENAE (fem.pl.), *SENO*s (masc.sg.), SENI (masc.pl.).

¹² On the contrary, the Germanicized MATRONAE VETERANAEHAE repeatedly known from Germany were probably not related to the SENAE but to the Roman veterans.

¹³ Cf. supra note 9.

¹⁴ I.e. with an expression of the comparative grade similar to the one found in Welsh (De Bernardo Stempel 1989).

Also in the Iberian Peninsula, the translated VETERES are attested as MATRES from Porcuna (Jaén)¹⁷.

Finally, if further proof were needed, the existence of a Celtic goddess SENA is confirmed around 43/44 AD¹⁸ by Pomponius Mela, who in the 3rd book of his De Chorographia Libri Tres speaks of those Celtic islands *quas quia plumbo abundant uno omnes nomine Cassiteridas appellant*¹⁹, setting then forth in chapter 48:

*Sena in Britannico mare Ossismicis adversa litoribus, Gallici numinis oraculo insignis est [...]*²⁰.

Furthermore, the hitherto neglected passage in Pomponius Mela not only accounts for the popularity of the goddess in Britain, the island being situated *in Britannico mare*²¹, but also for her plural manifestations, since her female priests perpetua verginitate sanctae numero novem esse traduntur; Gallizenas vocant, which is evidently the faithful transcription of the original Galli Senas vocant* with the regular Celtic lenition of the intervocalic sibilant at the beginning of the both Celtic and Latin accusative of the plural *Senae*²², whom the same Gauls considered endowed with magic powers: *putantque ingenii singularibus praeditas maria ac ventos concitare carminibus, seque in quae velint animalia vertere, sanare quae apud alios insanabilia sunt, scire ventura et praedicare[...]*²³.
